DRA is a leading provider of client/server library automation systems, networking services and other related services.

Since 1975 DRA has been developing leading library automation services - from placing your library catalog online and enabling comprehensive searches in your own catalog, as well as catalogs worldwide, to building Intranets that permit you to communicate more efficiently with employees.

Our central systems emphasis focuses on libraries and other information providers. These library systems products and services improve efficiencies and workflows in library operations. Our systems also give libraries the networking capabilities to become an essential part of the worldwide information network, allowing for more open communications between one library system and another.

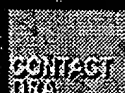

DRA has more than 10 years experience connecting major institutions to the Internet and a proprietary backbone that includes redundant T-3 connections to Internet interconnect points. Our services also include dedicated Network Service Provision for corporations and institutions.

DRA is proud to be the only library automation vendor that is a member of the World Wide Web Consortium (W3C).

Online Databases

A new pilot program will make it easier for you to find homework, business, health and reference information online. The Library is adding to our paid online database subscriptions, and in some cases converting subscriptions from print or CD-ROM to Internet-based. This will help you get more dynamic information in the Library or from home or work.

Search the Databases for a Specific Journal

Use this tool if you are looking for an article from a particular journal. Note, however, that a database may not offer the full text of all the articles from a journal.

Please note also that the journal list does not include information on the SIRS or GaleNet databases. While both of these databases do provide the full text of selected articles, their coverage is limited to particular subjects. These databases are not designed to be searched by journal title.

To browse all the titles that begin with a single letter, type only that letter into the left-hand box.

Search for journals whose titles contain a word or phrase . . .

DRA

DRA Taos

The DRA Taos system is a flexible, robust, multilingual solution for your libraries.

This innate flexibility allows Taos to more closely resemble the real-world workflows that occur within today's technically oriented library. Every library has its own way of performing operations, and with the overall flexibility of Taos you will not be forced to conform to the automation system, but the DRA Taos system will conform to your library's needs.

Taos is designed to meet all of your requirements in such a way that the workflow is easy to understand, and more user-friendly than most GUI packages. DRA Taos is based on the most advanced technological design tools available, making the system robust for today, as well as the library of the future.

The DRA Taos system combines a complete library automation system into one package. DRA Web2 - a World Wide Web tool for all your OPAC needs - Circulation, Cataloging, Acquisitions and Serials modules.

Taos is so complete that an ILL module has been incorporated into both the Circulation and Web2 modules. You will also have the flexibility for further custom programming, if needed.

The Taos modules all have multilingual capabilities. Basic languages are English, French and Spanish. The DRA Web2 and Cataloging modules even allow you to search and catalog in non-Roman character sets such as Chinese, Japanese and Korean.

A Global View

With Taos' incredible power and flexibility, resources across the street or halfway around the world become quickly accessible to your library's users. This occurs because Taos tears down the barriers to resource-sharing formerly caused by diverse computer systems and instead incorporates multilingual capabilities.

The three-tiered design used in Taos, combined with the incorporation of standards such as UNICODE, means that the Web2 user interfaces can be customized individually to meet a library's needs. For example, the same library can offer an expert OPAC interface in Chinese and a child's interface in English, both fully interchangeable on a single workstation. Taos can even recognize you when you log in and present you with your preferred interface.

Equally important, Taos is the only library automation system specifically designed to balance all potential combinations of network bandwidth and hardware processing power. Perhaps your library will choose powerful PC workstations fully distributing the client and server functions. Or maybe a better choice is a large central server and Network Computers with thin-client software using Java. More likely, most libraries will want a combination of both techniques - and Taos can mix and match according to what's most appropriate for you.

To find out more about Taos, DRA's next-generation library system, contact an account manager.

DRA Find

This DRA client is a stand-alone GUI PC product that serves as a search engine for a wide range of applications. The ability to simultaneously search several databases is just one of the features on our powerful DRA Find, perhaps the world's most advanced reference workstation for both staff and borrowers to use. Z39.50-compliant and Microsoft Windows-based, DRA Find provides a range of new and traditional PAC capabilities.

TRUE Multilingual Support

This newest version of DRA Find is the library industry's first true multilingual search interface. By "true multilingual," we mean that DRA Find can provide an English user interface to display Hebrew records, or a French user interface to display Chinese records, or virtually any other combination of languages, regardless of the underlying character set. In addition, multiple character sets -- for example, both English and Hebrew in the same record -- can be displayed simultaneously. This is achieved through DRA Find's implementation of the Unicode set of standards.

Merging Search Results

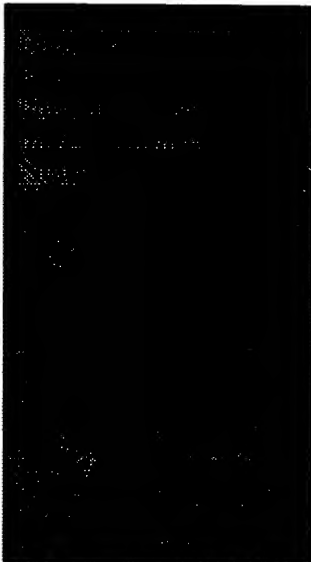

DRA Find's unique multiple simultaneous search capability has always included the ability to perform many Z39.50 searches at once. DRA Find allows you merge all the results from such a search into a single results display, including elimination of duplicates. Thus DRA Find is a single search utility providing a true Virtual Union Catalog.

Enhanced Holdings Display

DRA Find offers a simplified holdings display as well as complete support of the critical MARC Standard for Holdings Data, which allows detailed descriptions of your (and other libraries') collections.

Improved Image and Full-Text Support

As you evaluate various "Z39.50-compliant" products, be sure to pay close attention to the details! DRA Find is one of the first commercially available products to support the Generic Record Syntax (GRS) features of the Z39.50 protocol. GRS support eliminates a previous record-size restriction on full-text documents and images retrieved by DRA Find with Z39.50 searches.
